Comments:

1. Andrász Ezékiel is sometimes referred to as Andreas Ezekiel.
2. Adalert Féjes and Béla Fejes are probably one and the same name.
3. Ladislaus Hauser changed his name to László Madarasz after the war.
4. Ludwig Hautzmayer changed his name to Lajos Tatai after the war.
5. Frygyés Hefty is sometimes referred to as Friedrich Hefty. According to some sources he was credited with five confirmed and four unconfirmed victories (Tesař, Petr Aharon: c.d.)
6. Josef Kiss de Ittebe et Elemer is sometimes declared even 20 confirmed victories.
7. Josef Kretz changed his name to József Mátyásffy after the war.
8. Béla Macourek changed his name to Béla Maklár after the war.
9. Jozsef von Maier changed his name to Jozsef Modory after the war.
10. Nándor Udvardy is sometimes referred to as Ferdinand Udvardy. During Hungarian Border Conflicts – 1919 he achieved other one victory.

The differences in equipment and capability between the units was further indicated by a letter after the number of the company e.g. FliK 43J following this code:

D or Divisions-Kompanie	these units were used at the divisional level for observation and artillery observation, also to provide support for the infantry and observation of enemy trenches within the divisional boundary, equipped with two-seat aircraft.
F or Fernaufklärer-Kompanie	long range observation, directly subordinated to an army headquarters to observe the hinterland and the support routes of the enemy, equipped with two seat aircraft, in 1918 often transformed into Rb-FliKs
G or Großflugzeug-Kompanie	these companies were organized as squadrons of twin-engines bombers combined with one seat fighters but the support of such huge planes was so low that in reality only the fighters were ready for action; the first of these units Fluggeschwader I was renamed as FliK 101G in September 1917, the others came in 1918
J or Jagdflieger-Kompanie	fighter units against enemy aircraft ; the nominal strength should be 18 one-seater aircraft ready for action at each J-FliK but these figures were never reached because of support problems
K or Korps-Kompanie	these units were to carry out the same missions as the D-FliKs but at corps level; created in late 1918 so actually no training or equipment changes came into effect
P or Photoaufklärer-Kompanie	short range observers, equipped with one seater fighters with fixed photo-cameras and two seater Berg-aircraft reconfigured into one-seaters with photo cameras, formed in 1918
Rb or Reihenbildgeräte-Kompanie	short range observers similar to the P-FliKs but equipped with modern serial picture cameras mounted on two-seater aircraft; mainly used in trench observation for infantry support
S or Schutzflieger- or Schlachtflieger-Kompanie	originally created as escort for D-FliK observation companies but transformed in early 1918 into combat fighters to support infantry during the attack with bombing; also equipped with special MGs (Bombenloch-MGs) fixed on a swivel mount to the bombing aperture hatch in the bottom of the two seater plane so that the second crewman could fire directly down to earth to support ground troops
